«For all evils there are two remedies — time and silence»

This phrase describes everything what happened in the novel by Alexander Dumas "The Count of Monte Cristo".

I'm not going to tell you the obvious details about the unjust imprisonment in the Chateau d, about someone else's hatred, about the incredible liberation and the revenge to his enemies.

The plot revolves around the happy life of Edmond Dantes, on his becoming a captain of the ship «Morrel and Son». Edmond Dantes is a young successful man who opens to the reader as a deep and smart person. His way of life has many obstacles but he does not lose the sense of duty, the courage. He has learned to endure.

The events that take place at that time are not so simple. They are associated with the political theme that changes the direction of the plot.

I want to speak about the moral foundations of "The Count of Monte Cristo". Edmond does not give up. He does not lose heart.

It is hard for me not to admire this person. I believe that young and old people have to read, understand and remember forever this masterpiece. Almost every line is filled with the deep meaning. It is important for all of us to understand the past and improve the future. It is never too late to be wise.
